

Living Your Passion

by

Michael J. Rhodes

Award-winning author of *The Freedom Code:
Simple Solutions for Life's Major Challenges*

I'm glad to know that sometime in your life you have probably heard these two phrases: Live your dreams, and live your passions. And if you have never experienced this, or you don't remember hearing it, I'm praying for you right now—may you live your dreams; and may you live your passions.

Over the last decade, I have done a great deal of research for my books and articles. I have interviewed easily over a 1,000 people. And from my research, I have come to know that a lot of people either forgot their dreams and passions completely, or they have been so programmed by society to work for someone else that they never considered pursuing their own dream. I've asked them, "If money was no object, what would you do? What are your passions?" As predictable as the sunrise and sunset, the majority of people said, "I don't know," or, "I'll have to think about that." (My wife can vouch for these responses, too.)

I'm going to go out on a limb here. Unless you are part of the Shadow Government or New World Order who tracks and follows light beings, you are probably a light being yourself, and you hope to serve others and perform acts of charity and kindness. Am I right? Well, what if I told you that there was a way to live your passion and pursue your dreams of service and kindness? Would you at least consider the possibility?

Everyone has natural talents and gifts. You may be a natural at sewing, cooking, teaching, gardening, building things, problem solving—and the list goes on and on. (Think of your natural talents before reading further. Uh-uh...don't read on until you have at least one. Do you have it? Okay, read on.) What if I told you that there is a place where you could use your natural gifts in service to one another? What if I told you that while you are serving others, you could be mastering your craft and passing along your best knowledge, wisdom, and skills to children and students of all ages? Would you like to know how? Would you like to know how this works? If you are a true servant, I'm betting that you would.

To make this a reality in our lifetime, all it takes is one small group of people making a simple paradigm shift. This group of people would come together with the realizations that: we are all one; we are the Creator in action; no one is superior to another; no one can own the land, water, air, fire, or chi; and we live in harmony with each other and with the land. With these simple thoughts, it would be easy to focus this group's energy toward building a community where everyone serves each other by offering their best talents. Everyone serves each other by giving their best intentions and efforts. Everyone serves each other by expressing love, kindness, wisdom, and caring where needed. This is a reality that is coming to age. This is a simple solution to life's major challenges.

You have often heard that there is power in numbers. Coming together and living in spiritual communities with this mindset can change the way we live—instantly—because it is the power of numbers that makes it happen. Working together, meditating together, laughing, dancing, and singing together, increases the light and power to do more good for each other and the planet.

Of course this would not be a perfect community. We are still human and imperfect, but the intentions of love, caring, and kindness is what would make the difference. And as others see the examples of those living in a spiritual community and how it can help the world, others will ask for help to build more spiritual communities. One community turns into two, two turns into four, four turns into eight, and so on, and so on, and so on.

Again, I want this to be perfectly clear: This would not be a perfect community. There is still work to be done. There is planning, building, gardening, farming, teaching, and so on. There are still human emotions of impatience, anger, fear, and judgment. A spiritual community is not about sitting on your butt all day long chanting and ohm-ing. This type of spiritual community is about service—service to others—and growing mentally, physically, spiritually, and emotionally.

The benefits would be staggering, too. With no money, barter, or trade, everything would be free. In this type of community, it would instantly wipe out homelessness, hunger, lack of education, unemployment, and more. No more would you be ruled by the 1% who uses fear, threat, and violence to keep us as slaves. It would truly be a place where you could say, “When we serve each other, there are no masters.”

You may call me a dreamer. You may tell me, “Mike, this will never happen in your lifetime.” And I hope that this will be an inspiration to you all as I say to you with love, “Those who think this now, and those who have told me this in the past, you will not squash my dream of service and kindness to others. If I can help but one person live his or her passion to serve another, then I have lived my dream.”

I wish you all the best in your journey, and may you experience unconditional love in your lifetime.

Michael J. Rhodes is an award-winning author, motivational speaker, 30-year teacher, certified hypnotist, life coach, expert in metaphysical matters, and all-around nice guy. Contact Michael at info@AncientEldersPress.com.
www.AncientEldersPress.com